Presidents of Minority Serving Institutions

Sam Imlay, Graduate Research Associate Ben M. Schaap, Graduate Research Associate

The nation's minority serving institutions (MSIs) provide access to postsecondary education to millions of students of color, many of whom come from disadvantaged backgrounds. The presidents of these institutions play a critical role in fostering an environment supportive to the academic and life success of the students they serve. This infographic draws upon data from the American College President Study 2017 (ACPS) to highlight MSI presidents, their work, and their views of the college presidency.

Among the 1,546 college and university presidents who completed the ACPS, 24% led an MSI. The remaining 1,175 presidents led non-MSI institutions. MSI presidents led institutions representative of all seven federal MSI designations,² and some presidents led institutions with more than one MSI designation.

Both MSI presidents and non-MSI presidents listed budget and financial management and fundraising as primary time commitments. However, MSI presidents were more than twice as likely as non-MSI presidents to list accreditation as a major time commitment. PRIMARY TIME COMMITMENT OF MSI PRESIDENTS
