

UK's globally educated graduates will be able to:

SEE KNOWLEDGE.

- Analyze the global context of their chosen profession, and apply perspectives gathered from a global community of scholars as part of their professional expertise.
- Describe how individual and collective decision-making and civic responsibilities often generate ethical dilemmas, conflicts, and trade-offs that must be thoughtfully evaluated, weighed, and resolved.
- Explain how local features (economic, cultural, social, political and religious) of urban or rural communities, ethnicities, nations and regions are often linked to global trends, tendencies, and characteristics that often mutually shape one another.

SEE SKILL.

- Analyze the forces shaping international events, both now and in the past.
- Demonstrate effective and appropriate communication, interaction, and teamwork with people of different nationalities and cultures.
- Implement diverse frames of reference to critically examine and address complex problems.
- Use world language skills and/or knowledge of other cultures to seek access to information, engage in experiences, and document new understandings.

SEE ATTITUDE.

- Demonstrate respect and support for the common good of the world community, including its diversity, attention to social justice, concern for the welfare of others, and sustainability of natural and constructed systems.
- Demonstrate awareness of the complexity of cultural systems by describing the role that cultures play in influencing individual behavior, attitudes, and beliefs.
- Justify openness to difference, tolerance of ambiguity and unfamiliarity. Seek clarification and explain the benefits of being in the position of a learner when encountering others.
- Demonstrate an ongoing willingness to seek out international or intercultural opportunities, and describe how personal and social responsibility has been demonstrated through active involvement with diverse communities and real-world challenges.

To see blue in every corner of the globe, visit uky.edu/international

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

Global Learning Outcomes

see blue.